It appears that about four weeks ago a Pittsburgh woman who, deserted by her husband, had taken up her residence in Steubenville, was occupying a room with the deceased. Some time in the night there was a rap at the door, and a mule voice demanded admittance. Fitspatrick opened the door, when he was struck on the head by some one with a handy-billy or knucklers, the blow fractioning his skull. In the darkness neither Fitspatrick or the woman could recognize the assailant, and the police have not the slightest possible clue to the party. Fitspatrick's wound was at first not considered by himself, or any body else as serious. He was not only not confined to bed, but was able to walk around until the day he died. He, however, complained constantly of a ringing in his head, and told Mayor I rwin that he believed that stroke "would kill him yet." Then Tobe's spinal column commenced creeping up toward his cars, and he pat down the basket and assumed a position a la O'Baldwin. After several nasses Tobe's opponent pulled an ugly looking penkife, and let Tobe, have it for all it was worth on the right side of the lower part of the stomach, and field the scene.

A couple of physicians were called and sewed up Tobe's wound, which proved to be a cut some two inches in length, which although exceedingly painful, is not of a serious nature. Tobe was walking about as usual last night, although suffering some from the loss of blood.

Tobe's story is corroborated by Mrs. Hadlich, Haines, and two or three other men who witnessed the affray, and who declare with one voice that "Toby was as sober as Judge." The fellow who did the cutting was not known by name to any of them. Mrs. Hadlich says that he told her that he worked for Adolph Yocke, in Fullon. He was generally known among the gay bimmiers and fusiliers as "Charlie." A warrant was issued for his arrest.

Mas. Charpeau.—This popular artiste was greeted with a large and fashionable audience at the Opera House last evening. A play by the author of "A Celebrated Case" could scarcely be uninteresting, but it may be said that the effectiveness of "A Woman of the 'People," in which 'Mrs. Chanfrau appeared last evening, is chiefly due to the remarkably fine creation of that consummate artist. "A Woman of the People," in its original shape, is a vigorous melodrama, with the strong motive of maternal love dominating the five acts and five scenes, each of which taxes the principal artiste. The play has some melodramatic interest, but the situational are not as silrring, nor the accessores as picturesque or facinating, as those which the author employed so liberally in "A Celebrated Case" and "The TwoOrphans." The character of Marie is one that requires great skill to portray successfully. But Mrs. Chanfrau proved herself an attress of more than ordinary shilling, playing the difficult role with a power intensely effective. New ORLEANS, December 27 .- Congre acklen Acklen publishes a card in which he says, referring to the statement published this morning, "As this Committee did not pass upon only the question about did not pass upon only the question about, which I care, and which affects me socially, namely, the charge of seduction, I felt at liberty to submit that question to a committee in Washington, whose finding in the case I print below. This latter committee had before them a mass of evidence which the New Orleans Committee nover saw. I could readily print this to sustain their decision and entirely disprove the charge of seduction, but it is of such a character that a just sense of propriety induces me decision and entirely disprove the charge of seduction, but it is of such a character that a just sense of propriety induces me to withhold it from the public prints, as the New Orleans Committee did not pass upon the social question and the Washington Committee did and declared me innocent of the charge. Now if they or any of them hold that the finding of the Washington Committee was incorrect in fact, then I demand that the New Orleans committee shall also examine the social question; the charge of seduction; have summoned all witnesses they or I desire; apply all forms of a judicial inquiry to the case, and render their decision as to whether I am guilty or innocent of the charge of seduction. They formerly ignored the social question entirely, and as its now revived, I am prépared to prove my innocence socially as I did my strength politically.
